'Hey, Not Here'

Editor:

Having lived in the Trinidad area for more than 40 years, Martin Smuckler's recent letter regarding our trash/litter situation struck a chord in my heart (Mailbox, Sept. 2).

When I first moved to California in the 1970s, highways were posted with signs stating "$1,000 fine for littering." Although that fine was most likely rarely levied, it let folks traveling through our area know that pride is taken in our surroundings, our environment and littering/trashing could have consequences.

Fast forward 40 years and trash seems to be everywhere ... the last couple years have exploded (homelessness is a factor, yes).

Here's a truth coming from a grandma — littering is much more likely when an individual sees litter and trash everywhere. If it is clean to start with, chances are way better trash will be properly disposed of.

How we do anything is how we do everything, and if we, as long-time Humboldt residents, keep our place clean, let travelers and recent residents know, "We don't litter here — this is Humboldt!" If we kindly and gently remind anyone we see littering, "Hey, not here," and each, even without formally organizing, attempt to keep even our local areas where we each frequent picked up, I predict things could improve.

A big thank you to the Caltrans Roadside Maintenance Department, which is picking up trash on state highways again. I definitely notice the difference and am inspired. Let's all be contributors to making their jobs easier by changing the evolving culture from "trash is OK" to one that demonstrates community pride in our public places and, perhaps, hopefully teaches others a new way. (When in Humboldt, do as the Humboldts do?)

Humboldt, although changed through the years, is still a precious gem that deserves care and appreciation; a unique place with still enough people on the right page to turn this around.

Lucy Kostrzewa, Westhaven

'In Solidarity'

Editor:

We on the steering committee of Humboldt Asians and Pacific Islanders in Solidarity (HAPI) are writing in enthusiastic support of the proposed name change for Patrick's Point State Park to Sue-meg State Park ("State Parks Seeks Public Input on Patrick's Point Name Change to Honor Yurok Tribe," posted Sept. 10). We are the founders of HAPI, formed "to build and empower our community by amplifying, supporting and encouraging diverse voices and perspectives to foster a more engaged and inclusive community."

Part of our work toward freedom from oppressive structures and systemic racism is informed by bringing to light and reconciling the racist acts of the past, and to share the facts of revisionist history. The proposed park name change — from honoring a murderer of Native Americans, instead to affirming the Yurok place name used by the ancestral indigenous people who have lived in the area for thousands of years — is a meaningful acknowledgment of the region's original peoples who overcame the terrible injustices suffered over hundreds of years, and promotes reconciling these past acts towards a more equitable future.

HAPI recently has supported a local project to educate the public about the expulsion of Chinese people on the North Coast in the late 1800s, which decimated the Chinatown community that had existed in Eureka and buttressed the hostile tone of the social and political environment for people of Asian descent for more than half a century — that sadly, is in part still present today. Our group name ends with "in Solidarity." It is in keeping with HAPI's vision that we stand in solidarity with our indigenous sisters and brothers, and wholeheartedly support the park name change to Sue-meg State Park.

Stop That Train

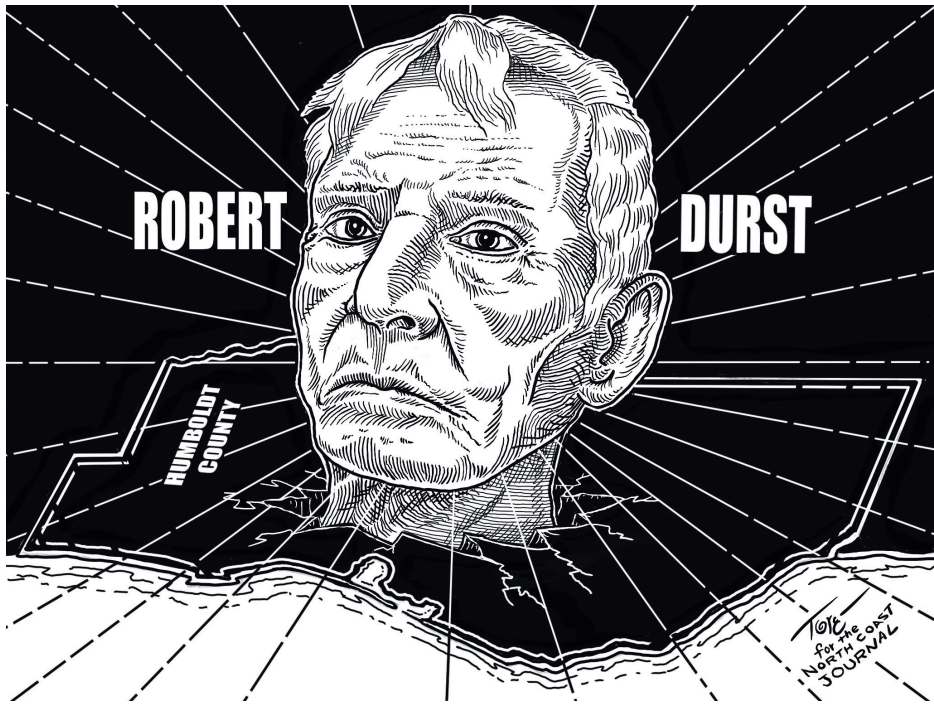

Editor:

An anonymous group has been romancing members of our Board of Supervisors in an effort to kill the Great Redwood Trail, and have already filed a request to kill the construction of the trail ("McGuire Warns of 'Toxic Coal Train' Plan," posted Sept. 3). This group has no interest in improving our way of life here in Northern California. They are solely interested in hauling low-grade coal through our neighborhoods so that they can then export the coal to other countries via Humboldt Bay. They want to keep it all hush-hush, hoping they can slip this through without public outcry.

The Russian River, the beautiful Eel River, and all the communities upon those banks would be adversely affected if we let this thing go through.

Here we are in Humboldt County, on the one hand planning to install a state-of-the-art wind farm just off shore, and at the same time considering coal trains to run through our communities. What's wrong with this picture?

Let's send these guys packing! Sign the

Homesick

September 2020 ~ pandemic and wildfires

Poised and breathless,
after too long away,
my whole being turned toward home.

But the path to Crater Lake was blocked by tortured, desiccated trees that immolated themselves in their rage.
I can't blame them.

So I'm stranded here
unwatered
(except by my tears)
and withering.

At least I've come to know this:
I'm here. Crater Lake is there.
As sure as the two of us are real,
so is the reality of our belonging to each other.

You and I are the two ends of the rainbow spanning the miles of fire and smoke.

How are you?

North Coast Journal Inc. Purchases Ferndale Enterprise

By North Coast Journal Staff
newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

The North Coast Journal Inc. has purchased The Ferndale Enterprise, keeping the 143-year old weekly newspaper in local hands, and will take over publishing the paper next month.

Caroline Titus, who has served as editor and publisher of the award-winning Enterprise for 25 years, said she's excited to start another chapter in life and to have found a local buyer for the iconic paper.

"After putting to bed more than 1,300 consecutive issues, it's time I take a break," she said. "I couldn't be happier that such a reputable and prestigious publication has purchased Ferndale's history book and the oldest business in town. It just feels so right."

Titus, who purchased The Enterprise in 1998 and has served as its editor — and essentially its one-person staff — since 1995, plans to continue reporting for the Enterprise as a contributing editor.

Journal Publisher Melissa Sanderson, who purchased North Coast Journal Inc. from its longtime owners in April, plans to expand the Cream City's paper to cover the entire Eel River Valley, which has been without regular newspaper coverage since the Humboldt Beacon closed in 2011.

"As a lifelong resident of the Eel River Valley, I'm honored to be trusted with this amazing piece of Humboldt County history," Sanderson said. "I can't thank Caroline enough for her 26 years of dedicated work and keeping this important First Amendment publication alive and thriving for our community."

The Enterprise, which published its first edition in May of 1878 and has continuously published since, has earned renown throughout the journalism industry for its unflinching coverage of local issues while stacking up more than 35 state and national awards. In 2019, Titus was named the Cal Press Foundation's Justus F. Craemer Newspaper Executive of the Year and in 2016, she won freedom of information and government transparency awards from the First Amendment Coalition, the Nor Cal Society of Professional Journalists and the California Newspaper Publishers Association.

"Caroline Titus' news operation has served Ferndale with honor," said Joe Wirt, director of affiliate relations with the California Newspaper Publishers Association. "It has also inspired and impressed publishers throughout the state and across the country. May The Enterprise continue to uphold the ideals of California newspapers."

Journal news editor Thadeus Green-son said the Journal's editorial staff is excited to take the baton from Titus and help write the paper's next chapter.

"I'm humbled to carry on The Enterprise's 143-year tradition of gathering the news that Ferndale needs to know, and excited to work toward bringing regular, reliable and impactful news coverage back to the entire Eel River valley," he said.

Sanderson, who can be reached at Melissa@northcoastjournal.com or 498-8370, said she is excited about the expansion of North Coast Journal Inc. and what the future holds for its publications. She is happy to answer any questions — and to hear any ideas — the community may have.

The Changing of the Names

An iconic North Coast park grapples with its murderous namesake

By Kimberly Wear
kim@northcoastjournal.com

Spanning some 600 acres of forest land with sunlit meadows and sweeping views of the Pacific Ocean from soaring cliffs, the natural beauty of Patrick's Point State Park belies the abhorrent acts of the man whose name it bears.

But that will likely change very soon. On Sept. 30, the State Park and Recreation Commission will consider a recommendation to formally designate the unit that stretches from north of Trinidad up past Agate Beach as Sue-meg State Park, conveying the descriptor used by the Yurok people for the area's jutting peninsula at the request of the tribe.

"We fully support the renaming of Patrick's Point State Park to Sue-meg State Park. It is no longer acceptable to name important places after murderers of indigenous people," says Yurok Tribal Chair Joseph L. James in a recent statement on the recommendation. "We ask the community to accept the name change because it will ensure the next generation inherits a more just world."

If approved, the name change will be the first for a State Park under California's "Reexamining Our Past Initiative," which was launched by the state last year to address what California Natural Resources Secretary Wade Crowfoot described as "historic names that stem from a dark legacy that includes discrimination, violence and inequity."

Other changes that have already taken place locally under the initiative include the removal of the Madison Grant Forest and Elk Refuge's marker laid for the Save the Redwoods League founder who also promoted "racist, anti-Asian, eugenicist and anti-miscegenation laws," according to State Parks. It was replaced with an interpretive sign. In a similar vein, another interpretive sign was placed in Humboldt Redwoods State Park at Founders' Grove in 2020 to address ties between the Save the Redwoods League and eugenics, and disavow the racist ideology.

The "Reexamining Our Past Initiative" builds on Gov. Gavin Newsom's formal apology in 2019 for the state's systemic role in the attempted genocide and destruction of Native communities — including by taking their traditional lands — which also set up the formation of the tribally-led Truth and Healing Council to "correct the historical record and acknowledge wrongdoings."

When the property located on Yurok ancestral land was brought into California State Park's fold nearly 100 years ago, the area was already well known as Patrick's Point in reference to Patrick Beegan — a murderous settler who laid a brief claim there in 1851 when the discovery of gold brought an influx of fortune hunters clambering into the region. So the name remained.

Beegan, however, after just a few years forfeited the site where he'd built a cabin as he fled law enforcement after being implicated by several witnesses in the murder of a Yurok boy, according to a State Park's report. An 1854 Crescent

City Herald article cited by the report also describes him as having "committed many outrages upon the Indians in the vicinity of Trinidad within the last year."

From there, Beegan is said to have headed out to the Bald Hills area but later led "a militia to a Native American village" he came across "at a place that became known as Christmas Prairie, about 30 miles east of Eureka. The place got its name from a massacre at that location on Christmas Day in 1864," the State Parks' report states. Beegan was reportedly killed by Native Americans at a spring near Hart's Prairie.

"We have long known that Patrick Beegan was one of many colonizers who participated in massacres of Native American people, including women and children," Yurok Tribal Heritage Preservation Officer Rosie Clayburn says in the tribe's statement. "I would like to thank the California State Parks North Coast Redwoods District for addressing this injustice and using the place name Sue-meg, a name used since time immemorial. The proposed name change represents a positive step in the right direction."

By no means is Patrick's Point the only local location with, as a previous Journal report ("Controversial Place Names in Humboldt County," July 17, 2015) describes, "ignominious eponymy" — including several named for men who participated in the 1860 massacre on Tuluwat Island, such as Larabee Valley, as well as others that contain racist or sexist slurs.

And the decision now before the California State Parks commission comes amid a larger, ongoing national debate about renaming military bases, cities, schools, parks and other places to replace derogatory terms or references to individuals tied to slavery, institutional discrimination and violent oppression.

Earlier this month, for example, Squaw Valley — the veritable California ski resort with an Olympic pedigree — dropped its "derogatory and offensive" name in consultation with the local Washoe Tribe to become Palisades Tahoe. (Humboldt County, as the Journal noted in our 2015 story, is home to three creeks that go by the same "derogatory and offensive" name.) Closer to home, the city of Fort Bragg is still grappling with whether to drop its reference to Confederate Gen. Braxton Bragg, although no alternatives are currently being considered. According to Fort Bragg Vice Mayor Jessica Morsell-Haye, who heads the committee looking at the possible name change that just conducted a community survey on the issues, says she expects to bring "recommendations back to city council in late November."

The State Park and Recreation Commission, meanwhile, is taking public input on the Patrick's Point recommendation until close of business Sept. 28, which can be emailed to planning@parks.ca.gov with the words "Patrick's Point Name Change" in the subject line. Those interested can also comment during the meeting.

The commission staff report states there is little cost associated with re-naming the park, which already includes the Yurok built and recently renovated Sumeg Village with its traditional ceremonial structures, including redwood plank family houses, sweathouses, a dance structure and changing houses.

The Yurok Tribe states that Newsom's apology was a "first step in creating a true partnership with our state agencies" and notes the tribe is looking to the future "to help our Tribal people and the state heal from some of the past wrongdoings."

"The dark past of the state is present all over our landscape including many other namesakes such as this; but this landscape also holds our genesis, history, religion and the story of our peoples' resilience," the tribe's statement says. "These are the stories that warrant recognition and are things that have been here since the beginning of the world and will continue into the future.

"We can start to change the narrative for generations to come by honoring ancestral places and telling the true history in the state of California."

Local COVID-19 Deaths Continue to Mount

In the two days before this issue of the Journal went to press Sept. 21, Humboldt County Public Health confirmed four new COVID-19 deaths — making 35 locally since Aug. 1 — and 161 new cases of the virus.

A state database showed 20 people currently hospitalized with COVID-19 locally, with two under intensive care. The slow decline in hospitalizations — which peaked at 42 Sept. 3 — is welcome news for local hospitals, which had been pushed beyond capacity amid a brutal August that saw 2,000 new cases confirmed, 98 hospitalizations and 22 deaths.

But while hospitalizations had declined and case rates had plateaued, other signs indicated the current Delta-variant-fueled surge remained far from over. After recording a test-positivity rate of 10.1 percent in July — the highest for any month since the pandemic began — the rate in Humboldt County jumped to 15.9 percent in August. Through the first 20 days of September, it has jumped to 16.8 percent, far outpacing state (2.9 percent) and national (8.1 percent) rates.

With case rates high locally, Public Health continues to encourage people to get vaccinated, saying “health officials overwhelmingly agree that vaccination is the most effective way to prevent severe outcomes.”

According to the county's dashboard, 55 percent of local residents are now fully vaccinated, with nearly 70 percent of residents over the age of 12 having received at least one dose.

Public Health reported Sept. 17 that the seven-day average of new cases confirmed per 100,000 residents showed that while fully vaccinated residents accounted for about 11 new cases daily per 100,000 in population, unvaccinated residents accounted for an average of 53 new daily cases per 100,000 residents. Further, Public Health also reported Friday that of the the county's then-84 COVID-19 deaths, seven had been fully vaccinated, while 334 of the county's then-368 hospitalizations — 91 percent — had been of unvaccinated residents.

National, state and local health officials advise that vaccination remains incredibly safe and effective protection against severe illness, hospitalization and death from COVID-19, and the county has a host of no-cost clinics scheduled over the next week.

As the Journal went to press, vaccination clinics were scheduled to be held in Garberville, Blue Lake, Arcata, Eureka and Redway this month, with no-cost COVID-19 testing available at most. To make an appointment in advance or view additional vaccination opportunities and to request help with transportation, visit www.vaccines.gov or www.myturn.ca.gov.

Through Sept. 21, the county had confirmed 8,254 cases of the virus to date, with 372 hospitalizations and 88 COVID-19 deaths.

Nationwide, more than 42.2 million cases had been confirmed with 675,071 deaths, according to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control. Of those, 4.4 million cases and 67,628 related deaths had been confirmed in California, according to the Department of Public Health.

Durst Convicted: A Los Angeles County jury convicted enigmatic real estate scion Robert Durst of murder Sept. 17, for the 2000 execution-style shooting of Susan Berman, whom prosecutors alleged could have implicated Durst in his wife's disappearance. Durst was living in Trinidad at the time of the killing, and drove from Humboldt County to Berman's Los Angeles home to commit the murder. POSTED 09.18.21

Police Shooting Victim Identified: The Humboldt County Sheriff's Office identified the man killed in a Sept. 9 police shooting on Mad River Road on the outskirts of Arcata as 35-year-old Charles David Chivrell, of Eureka. The Sheriff's Office reported that one officer — Michael Griffin, of the California Highway Patrol — fired his weapon during the incident in which Griffin allegedly brandished a firearm at officers. POSTED 09.16.21

Motel Condemned: The city of Eureka condemned The Royal Inn on Sept. 16, saying an inspection there found conditions that “posed a significant hazard” to occupants and the community. The city reported numerous code violations, including hazardous electrical work, rooms contaminated with blood, urine and feces, and infestations of rats, cockroaches and bedbugs. It's unclear how many residents were displaced by the city's action. POSTED 09.16.21

The Soup Doctor

A mother's healing fall soup

By Wendy Chan

onthetable@northcoastjournal.com

A soup with pork bones, figs and corn to heal you inside and out. Photo by Wendy Chan

Fall is quietly approaching and chilly days are not too far away. It's the season to nourish our bodies, as my mom used to say. She would make special seasonal soups to prevent us from getting colds and to keep us healthy. She would spend hours in the kitchen making a pot of soup with fresh chicken bones or pork bones and Chinese herbs. The smell was always comforting and the taste was delicious.

Nowadays, I love being the soup "doctor" for my family. All my boys have their own favorites, so I normally take turns making them for each of them. Now that two of my boys have moved away for college, I'll miss making their favorite soups. Lately I've been working on a new recipe made with fresh local ingredients that we all enjoy very much. It started with fresh pork bones I got from my butcher, the plentiful green and white figs from my friends, and a trip to the farmers market to buy sweet yellow corn and carrots.

I had been dreaming of making something combining these ingredients. When I asked my mother for her advice, she suggested cooking the figs in Chinese apricot kernel soup to cure coughing or a cold. Well, I couldn't get apricot kernel locally, so I made it with what I had on hand and also added ginger. It was a success — we finished a whole pot in one meal. The pork bones brought so much flavor, the figs and carrots lent a subtle sweetness and the corn gave it an earthy aroma. It was light, savory, sweet and soothing.

According to my mother and traditional medicine, the soup nourishes the lungs, heals the body and helps with digestion. This soup is great for fall and winter. If pork bones and figs are not your favorites, you can substitute with chicken and Asian pears. They have similar health benefits and are also tasty.

Pork Bone and Fig Soup

2 pounds pork bones, chopped
4 fresh figs, halved
1 pound carrots, chopped
2 ears of corn, quartered lengthwise and cut into 2-inch chunks
5 slices ginger
10 cups water
¼ cup cooking rice wine
Salt and pepper
¼ cup goji berries

Rinse the pork bones and soak them in a pot of hot water with the cooking wine for 20 minutes. This will get rid of some of the smell and blood. Rinse the bones well again and drain.

Place the bones in a large pot with the water and ginger, bring to a boil and cook for 15 minutes. Reduce the heat and cover to simmer for 45 minutes, skimming and discarding any foam and fat on top. Add the carrots, corn and figs, bringing the pot back to a boil for 15 minutes. Reduce the heat again to simmer covered for another 30 minutes. Add salt and pepper to taste. Serve with rice or by itself.

Welcome Back to Book Club

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill
jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

Greetings, everyone!

I know I said hosting book club would have to wait for our local case numbers to drop and vaccination rates to go up, but now that Scott and I have become desensitized to seeing daily national death tolls in the thousands, we figure we're ready to put out some baked brie and see our favorite people. And with everyone vaccinated and healthy, it should be fine. So let's get our calendars out! Reply — not reply all, ha ha! — with your preferred Saturday next month and a nomination for our next book. Can't wait to see you all in person!

Hello again!

OK, thanks for responding so quickly, friends! I'm hearing not everyone has gotten their shot(s). So I guess I'll ask the group how we feel about those who've chosen not to vaccinate masking or Zoom-ing in? So far, it looks like the second Saturday is in the lead. Ted, thanks for the timely suggestion but maybe DeFoe's A Journal of the Plague Year isn't quite the thing to celebrate getting back to normal. And, please, everyone remember to avoid the reply-all button so we don't clog up those inboxes. Thanks!

I get it!

Zoom fatigue is real, lol. And while I sympathize with those of you who feel discriminated against, please refrain from comparing missing out on Scott's mulled wine with being sent to a Nazi death camp. I would have thought the chapter of Eli Wiesel's Night most of us skimmed through before tapping out would have taught us all better. (And for the record, Naomi, when you pitched a "historical" book you made it sound way more Outlander, but whatever.) Anyway, since there's still time, perhaps those who'd like to attend could get vaccinated this month?

Friends,

Let's all take a deep breath and try to remain respectful and also not hit reply all. These are unprecedented times and I'm sure that under different circumstances, Naomi would not have responded to

@ncj_of_humboldt

Anita's explanation about not wanting anything unknown in her body by bringing up her Botox injections or that bartender in Tahoe. Moving on, it sounds like a few folks aren't comfortable with the vaccine for personal reasons. Likewise, if we weren't all so stressed, I doubt Elaine and Todd would have said such frankly unkind things about Scott's mulled wine, which is a spicy, seasonal delight. Yes, it's a little heavy but not everybody is used to downing a box of Franzia rosé in one night, Elaine. Also thanks to you both for all the YouTube links — so important to hear different viewpoints, even if they are from some guy hawking supplements and tanning beds! Is watching the next video the algorithm sends you really "research?" Sure. Why not.

Finally, I see what you're trying to do, Ted and we're not reading Stephen King's The Stand.

OK!

Let's start over and just make this a vaccinated/Zoom evening. Nobody at unnecessary risk and nobody "crushed under the authoritarian jackboot of this book club," Dan. If we're going to talk dictators, Dan, maybe you should think about why we all stopped going to your game nights. And Cheryl, while Naomi could have put it more gently without the reference to a leprechaun's fishnets, the mask you crafted from a mesh key lime bag is ineffective at best. Also, everyone: a reminder that as a veterinarian, Paul cannot write prescriptions for humans so please stop hitting him up for horse de-wormer. And stop hitting reply all. I'm begging you.

Good evening!

Well, morning, really, as I've been up fielding emails since I got off work. I understand some people would like to confirm vaccination status officially with cards. (The Costco muffins passed off as homemade two years ago seem to have eroded some group trust. And please don't get defensive, Celia, we all heard the crinkling plastic from the kitchen.) So go ahead and send me a pic of your vaccine card and we can get back to choosing a book that will definitely not be dystopian fiction or outbreak-related nonfiction, Ted.

Dan,

This is clearly a business reply card from Men's Health Magazine that you've just written your name and the word "PFIZER" on. And yes, I know I'm replying all because, Jesus, you people have no idea. You're on the Zoom, Dan.

Dear book club family,

I'd like to apologize, as my last email was not a reflection of my best self. We can have different opinions and still be friends! Even if that difference means one person being fine with possibly exposing their friend to a virus that could make them feel like they're drowning and leave them with long-term symptoms if they're lucky enough to survive. Right? And yes, we need to respect the medical privacy of others, even if up until now they've been totally OK with posting close-up photos of their foot ailments to crowd-source home remedies on Facebook. We need to listen to friends who feel suffocated by masks, even if we know that with the industrial strength shapewear they're wearing at this very moment, they could be dropped from an airplane and their torso would remain completely intact — but no complaints about breathing there! And we need to acknowledge the beliefs of our friends, even if, like Anita, they've been brainwashed into thinking COVID vaccines turn your skin magnetic or toxic like a freaking Amazonian tree frog. In that spirit of compromise, let's start over with a nice al fresco brunch in our backyard. But we've all already read Lord of the Flies, Ted. Please respond individually, not, for the love of all that's holy, by replying all.

You know what — no.

Am I so desperate for the thin veneer of normalcy that I'm willing to roll the dice with my health to sit around a table and talk about a book none of you read? I honestly won't even read it. I'll just get the audiobook and listen at double speed like it's being told by goddamned chipmunks because I am exhausted living in this pandemic nightmare that's being prolonged by the very people I'm hoping to toast with this awful mulled wine. Of course it's awful — it's hot. It's hot wine, for Christ's sake. But I pretend to like it the same way I pretend your utterly self-destructive game of make-believe isn't endangering literally everyone! Well, I'm done. I'm locking it down, reading some old Garfield comics and eating this brie by myself with whatever wine hasn't been boiled to hell yet. Paul, hit me up if you're holding any ketamine. Don't reply all.

Trinidad Toil

By Meg Wall-Wild

getout@northcoastjournal.com

Every day, locals and visitors wind up and down the trails to Trinidad State Beach. As I walked to the break in the red curb at the end of the parking lot off Stagecoach Road, I anticipated some killer views. It is Trinidad after all. What I did not expect was a close footpath that broadened into a freshly maintained trail with a magnificent view of Pewetole Island.

The path, made by foot rather than by plan, can lead you to beautiful places. I've walked the trail to the beach before and passed up this first right turn, thinking it was a nipper path, a shortcut with twists and steepness that requires nimble feet and a thorough tick check at the end. But its closeness deceives. A few yards in, a restored path tilts and opens up to a striking view of the Pacific Ocean.

The Trinidad Coastal Land Trust stewards miles upon miles of trail, stitching together easements through 26 properties to secure public access to beach and forest. The American Hiking Society stewards the countless trails that crisscross our sprawling nation. Each year, the partnership between the two nonprofits brings a team of 10 vacation volunteers to Trinidad. Backbreaking physical labor is not what comes to mind when planning a vacation. Yet from July 12 to 16, these dedicated individuals spent their off time maintaining trails in Humboldt's backyard.

Once a work site only accessible by foot, the project's targeted 300-foot section of trail is now a clean line on the hillside. "A hard slog" is not even close to describing the sheer effort that it took the out-of-town volunteers to wrest it from the wild fauna and gravity trying to obscure and obliterate it.

We sputtered to a halt, taking in a sweeping coastal vista. Sunlight held the bank of fog at the edge of the bay, Pewetole wreathed in swirling enchantment. I was momentarily distracted from my admiration of hard labor. After a long look, I returned to the contemplation of hardcore trail maintenance. I have cleared paths myself and recall how pride can give a boost to tired muscles at the end of the workday. And the honest exhaustion reached after hauling tools uphill (always up at the end of the day), consuming that last bit of energy.

"Hand tools!" my spouse muttered,

The restored trail to Trinidad State Beach emerges from the shade and slopes downhill, a perfect platform from which to take in the awesome California Coastal National Monument.

acknowledging the effort required to achieve a level path. He, too, has dug anchoring roots out of a windswept hill. A hiker passed us, nodding and wheezing their way up into full sunshine. Wildflowers and saplings and invasive plants had all been tamed, if only momentarily. Their growth will soon soften the raw edges and reach up to nibble at the view. A bee sunned itself on a leaf, utterly ignoring us. Another hiker strolled by as the wind stirred the trees. On the beach far below, a happy couple played with equally happy dogs as the surf crashed on the sea stack behind them.

We returned to the path another day, taking it from the bottom up. There was no glorious sunshine that day but who cares? Surf Camp was in session, a line of bright boards on the dark sand. The students ran in and out of the water, much to the amusement of an elderly couple perched on beach chairs. I scanned ahead, looking for the lower trailhead at the mouth of Miller Creek. At first glance, the tumble of stones looked like any other tumble but a man heading down to the beach revealed the way.

As we headed up the switchback path, mighty Trinidad Head was reduced to a mere bump under a swirling shroud. As a sailboat tacked through the rocks, I was grateful for the foghorn and lighthouse. The fragile white sail was a wisp in the fog. We paused to speak of the brave souls that ventured out before lighthouses, foghorns or GPS. The terror of sea and fog did not hold them back. I, on the other hand, shudder at the mere thought.

We wound back up the hill to admire the volunteers' sweat equity. American Hiking Society volunteers give up their vacations to maintain trails that are too far away for them to hike regularly or maybe ever again. How cool is that? This year the vaccinated volunteers came from Arizona, Illinois, Texas and parts of California. These hardy workers are not pampered, either. Campsites graciously provided by Patrick's Point State Park gave them a spectacular setting for slumber but no turndown service, no mints on pillows. Despite sore muscles, the volunteers persevered, with expert guidance from two State Parks staffers and one or two from the Trinidad Coastal Land Trust. After completing the section with four days of tough toil, the team then removed invasive English ivy from Baker's Beach. Fortunately, it was not all hard graft. The volunteers looked for common murre and peregrine falcons on a relaxing naturalist hike — a prime example of a postman's holiday. The cherry on their cake was a special tour of Trinidad Lighthouse's viewing area and its breathtaking view of the California Coastal National Monument.

As my partner and I rambled back down to the beach, I found myself overcome with gratitude. For those of us who must hike, paths like this are our life's blood. Visit www.trinidadcoastallandtrust.org for a map, and to learn more about the dedicated community organization that keeps this staggeringly valuable private/public partnership network of trails available for our enjoyment. The land trust's Stewardship Work Days are ongoing, a fabulous way for high school students to gain experience. Sign up as a family and spend the first Saturday morning of the month (through December, 9:30 a.m. to noon) giving back to nature. During Coastal Clean Up Month, the land trust will coordinate volunteers at Houda Point and Moonstone Beach on Sept. 26, 10 a.m.-2 p.m. Their worthy goal? To clean up all the beaches, trails and parking areas between the Little River and Trinidad. Email michelle@trinidadcoastallandtrust.org to add your name to the roster. Or, if you wish to explore America's trails with shovel in hand, visit www.americanhiking.org to volunteer. Hikers like me will be forever grateful. ●

Klamath Still Kicking Out Plenty of Kings

By Kenny Priest

fishing@northcoastjournal.com

Salmon fishing on the lower Klamath continues to roll on. Fresh schools of jacks (2-year-old males) as well as adults are arriving just about daily. Anglers fishing from the Glen up to Johnson's are finding fresh fish side-drifting riffles and dragging roe through the deep slots. The rain over the weekend bumped the flows just enough to really put the fish on the move and the fishing was wide-open from top to bottom. And the numbers from California Department of Fish and Wildlife provide plenty of evidence. For the week ending Sept. 16, a whopping 886 jacks were harvested above the U.S. Highway 101 bridge. During the same week, more than 1,000 adults were released along with another 264 jacks. Those are some pretty impressive catch rates. The lower Klamath adult salmon quota was met Sept. 7, but anglers can still keep two jacks (less than or equal to 23 inches) per day with a possession limit of six. You may still fish for adult Chinook salmon in other sections of the Klamath Basin, including the main stem of the Klamath River above Weitchpec and the entire Trinity River, until their quotas are met. Anglers may keep track of the Klamath and Trinity river quotas by calling (800) 564-6479.

Weekend marine forecast

Ocean conditions are expected to be plenty fishable by the weekend. As of Tuesday, the forecast out 10 nautical miles for Friday is calling for winds out of the west up to 5 knots with northwest swells 5 feet at 11 seconds. Saturday is calling for winds from the north up to 5 knots and northwest swells 3 feet at seven seconds and west 5 feet at 18 seconds. Sunday the winds will be from the north up to 5 knots and north swells 3 feet at five seconds and west 6 feet at 13 seconds. These conditions can and will change by the weekend. For an up-to-date weather forecast, visit www.weather.gov/eureka or www.windy.com. To monitor the latest Humboldt bar conditions, visit www.wrh.noaa.gov/eka/swan. You can also call the National Weather Service at 443-7062 or the office on Woodley Island at 443-6484.

The Oceans:

Eureka

The rough ocean kept boats off the water over the weekend and through Monday. Friday, the Pacific halibut fishing was pretty good for the Eureka fleet. According to Tim Klassen, of Reel Steel Sport Fishing, the bite was in the same general area, just north of the entrance in 250 feet of water. "The fish are still on the small size, ranging from 10 to 30 pounds," he said. "Boats were back on the water Tuesday, but the conditions were a little rough. The fish are definitely still there, however. The rockfish bite at the Cape hasn't been red-hot; we've needed to move around a little to find the biters. Ocean conditions are looking good beginning Friday."

Shelter Cove

The salmon fishing has slowed down out of the cove, according to Jake Mitchell, of Sea Hawk Sport Fishing. "We had four salmon on Wednesday but haven't boated one since," he said. "There were a few caught on Thursday as well, but I haven't heard of any landed since then. The rock fishing has been excellent with limits of rockfish and lingcod every day. We made it up to Rodgers break one day and spent the rest of the week off the Ranch House for the rockfish."

Crescent City

According to Britt Carson, of Crescent City's Englund Marine, rough ocean

Six-year-old Rylan Angeli, along with the help of father Nick, landed this nice king salmon on a recent trip to the Klamath River.

conditions had the boats tied up over the weekend. "Late last week, a few Pacific halibut were still being caught and the rockfish bite was still going strong." The tuna water was within 15 to 20 miles as of Tuesday, but conditions weren't great. The weather looks much better starting Wednesday, so there should be plenty of boats making the run.

The Rivers:

Lower Klamath

Salmon fishing remains excellent for both jacks and adults on the lower Klamath. Side-drifting roe in the riffles and dragging roe through the deeper holes are both producing fish from the Glen to Johnson's. Fresh fish are coming into the lower river just about every day. Anglers can keep two jacks (less than or equal to 23 inches) per day with a possession limit of six.

Does This Still Matter?

HBO's Scenes From a Marriage remake

By Jennifer Savage
screens@northcoastjournal.com

SCENES FROM A MARRIAGE. I think a lot about the influence of historical context on works of art. Strip away the social and political events of the time and does a painting, a book, a play, a punk rock band, a movie hold up in that vacuum? What art remains relevant, meaningful, a source of satisfaction without the catalyst of ground needing breaking?

When revered Swedish director Ingmar Bergman released Scenes From a Marriage in 1973, the film world had not yet been inundated with movies about marriages falling apart. The series, starring Liv Ullmann and Erland Josephson, resonated around the world, influencing directors for decades to come — think Woody Allen, Noah Baumbach, Richard Linklater — and even allegedly caused Sweden's divorce rate to skyrocket. In HBO's remake, directed by Hagai Levi and starring Jessica Chastain and Oscar Isaac, the story unfolds similarly to the original, but this time the wife is the financial head of the family, her success in the tech industry more lucrative than her husband's academic pursuits. One needn't be familiar with the original Scenes to understand this new one — I wasn't — although who exactly the intended audience is for the modern retelling is unclear. In the 48 years since Bergman's story of a crumbling marriage garnered global renown, divorce movies have proliferated. Any pleasure to be had viewing Levi's remake comes from watching Chastain and Isaac ply their craft in beautiful shot after beautiful shot.

The story itself is grim. From the initial scenes, we're instructed in how Mira (Chastain) and Jonathan's (Isaac) marriage functions thanks to a plot device that has them interviewed by a grad student researching gender norms and monogamy, and how those factor into making marriage successful. Mira and Jonathan speak kindly to and about each other, but Mira is clearly distracted and Jonathan too eager to engage. Their marriage succeeds, he emphasizes, because they have not given into the capitalistic school of thought that a marriage serves as a means toward happiness and self-fulfillment. Instead they understand that the primary purpose of marriage is security, the creation of a family unit.

For happy couples, the questions put to Mira and Jonathan — how they define themselves and the success of their marriage — may prompt their own reflections, lead to the sort of pleasurable late night conversations couples have when on the same page. Other couples may see themselves reflected in how the surface differs from what swirls beneath and opt not to discuss or continue watching this show at all. This is a story about leaving, after all.

The first episode jumps from the interview to a dinner where Jonathan and Mira describe the encounter to another couple at their house. Kate (Nicole Beharie) and Peter (Corey Stoll) eschew other conventions, both with their willingness to make their disagreements a point of discussion and with their polyamorous arrangement. When Peter and Kate's arguing grows intolerable, Mira invites Kate upstairs as an attempt to mitigate conflict and restore equilibrium, a habit we see repeatedly during the first two episodes. Her attempt fails however, when Kate refuses to agree with Mira's assessment that her "arrangement" is making her unhappy or might be harmful to her children. She then makes an unwelcome move on Mira that prompts a return downstairs, where Peter's shouting wakes up Jonathan and Mira's little daughter. For a moment, the decorum of Jonathan and Mira's marriage appeals, especially when the source of Mira's earlier tension is revealed. We see how, despite the formality overlapping every interaction, warmth and trust flow easily between them, even if the ability to truly speak their feelings does not.

Sadly for our protagonists, the lack of true connection matters more than the kindness they both strive for. Instead of having a real conversation about the complicated decision they face, they speak around it, come at it sideways, each checking in with the other in a "but how do you feel?" back-and-forth. It feels like being at a four-way stop with every driver waving the others on, "No, you go."

The remake is said to mirror the plot points of the original but if you, like me, are not familiar, I do not want to spoil what happens along the way. It's no spoiler to say we're not in for something joyful here, however. Watching Chastain and Isaac provides a master class in acting, but the emptiness of their marriage undermines what pleasure one might take in admiring Chastian's exquisitely sculpted features and Isaac's physical appeal.

A final note: Levi chooses to kick off each episode outside the fourth wall. We watch the actors get ushered in, lit and otherwise prepared for their scenes. The reasoning for this is unclear, but maybe the idea is to usher us into Jonathan and Mira's lives before we have a chance to think too much about whether that's a place we want to be. *TVMA. 60M. OBITUARIES

Eli Jurkovich went with God, during his sleep, early morning September 6, 2021, at the age of 92 at his home, in Eureka, CA.

Eli and his 10 siblings were 1st generation born Americans to immigrant parents – Vaso Jurkovich and Stana Perovich from Montenegro and Serbia. He was born in Red Lodge, Montana, August 19, 1929. His father worked as a coal miner in Red Lodge and nearby Washoe.

Eli started working when he was around 10 years of age setting pins at the local bowling alley and that work ethic stayed with him his entire life.

Other childhood jobs included working in a bakery with a deaf mute who taught him sign, picking and sorting coal, and selling newspapers. After graduating high school, he went to work at the Yellowstone Inn, where he met his future wife and mother of his children, Patricia Ann Kinsella. When the Inn closed for the winter, Eli bell hopped at the exclusive Goodyear Resort in Goodyear AZ.

When the Korean War broke out, Eli volunteered for the U.S. Navy. Before going to sea, he married Patricia in San Diego, December 23, 1950, at the Naval Training Station.

After four years in the US Navy, Eli took a job with Stuart Floor Company located in Redwood City, CA, as a hardwood floor sander and finisher. Within a short period of time, he became foreman of a crew 100 strong, who floored much of the post-war South Bay area growth explosion.

Eli was not only the hardest worker in his day job; he took a second job cooking burgers at night to get ahead. His frugal wife saved and they were able to buy into partial ownership of Eureka Floor Company in 1959. With his hard work and drive to succeed, the business thrived.

He retired at age 65 and pursued a new love in life – horse racing. For a decade and a half, he was a fixture at the Turf Club where he made new group of friends. In the weeks preceding his death, he attended the horse races at the Humboldt County Fair – He loved the long shots and the trifectas.

Eli was generous with many charities. He particularly liked helping fellow veterans. If anyone is moved to make a donation in his name, The Veterans of Foreign Wars would be a good one.

He is survived by his ex-wife Patricia Kinsella, his eldest son Mike Jurkovich, his daughters Patty Hoskins, Mary Ann Wick, Marty Jurkovich Curtis, his youngest son Robert Jurkovich, his youngest brother Nick Jurkovich, 8 grandchildren, and 14 great grandchildren. And, his loving companion for over 30 years, Barbara Randle.

There will be no funeral or memorial service as per his wishes. His family will take his ashes back to Red Lodge, Montana to be buried in the family plot with the ashes of his heart dog Joey.

Every time Eli would leave his mother's home, she would always tell him "Go with God."

It is hard to know if it was just a coincidence that his final journey occurred on Labor Day.

He will forever be in our hearts.

Eli Jurkovich

The Quartz Crisis

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

The "quartz crisis" began in Tokyo on Christmas Day in 1969 when Seiko unveiled the world's first quartz watch, the Astron 35SQ. Designed by Kazunari Sasaki of Suwa Seiko-sha, the Astron achieved 100 times the accuracy of a regular mechanical watch by using a vibrating quartz crystal instead of a balance wheel for time keeping. Although the Astron originally cost ¥450,000 the same as a Toyota Corolla at the time — over the next 30 years, the price would drop to where a perfectly serviceable quartz watch, keeping time to within five minutes a year, can now be had for $10.

While quartz technology brought accurate time within the reach of everyone, it would create a catastrophe for the Swiss watchmaking industry. Because Switzerland stayed neutral during World War II, the watch industry was unaffected, unlike other nations that shifted their watchmaking industry to timers for military ordinance. From 1945 until the early 1970s, the Swiss were able to capitalize on what was a virtual monopoly, accounting for more than 50 percent of the world watch market. All this changed with the advent of cheap and accurate quartz crystals; in the two decades following introduction of the Astron, the number of skilled workers employed by the Swiss watch industry fell from 90,000 to 28,000. Hence, what was a quartz crisis for the Swiss was a quartz revolution elsewhere, especially Japan, where companies such as Seiko, Citizen and Casio thrived.

Quartz crystals used in watches depend on the piezoelectric effect, discovered in 1880 by French physicists, brothers Jacques and Pierre Curie. Squeeze a crystal and it will generate a tiny electric current; pass electricity through it and it will deform. (The word comes from Greek piezein, meaning to squeeze.) Today, the piezoelectric industry accounts for $2 billion in annual business, thanks to its use in inkjet printers, gas wands and lighters, guitar and drum pick-ups, microbalances, atomic-scale microscopes and much more.

If you're wearing a watch, chances are that inside, safe within a tiny capsule, there's a little quartz crystal (about 1/10 of an inch long) in the shape of a tuning fork. When a miniscule current is applied, it vibrates at a constant 32,768 times per second, or hertz. That frequency isn't just a random number — the size, shape and plane on which the crystal is cut determines it. Why 32,768? It's 2 to the 15th. Halve it with a "flip-flop" circuit and you get 16,384; do that 14 more times via a series of flip-flops and you get a once-a-second pulse. If you have an analog quartz watch (with hands), you'll see the secondhand jumping forward in one-second increments.

The frequency of the quartz crystal largely determines its accuracy. The original Astron vibrated at 8,192 hertz (2 to the 13th), and was accurate to within one minute per year. Following the Astron, watches have incorporated higher frequencies (mostly 32,768 hertz) with a corresponding increase in accuracy. Other key advances included replacement of the analog hands with a digital face, originally LED (light-emitting diode) and later LCD (liquid crystal display).

It took awhile for the Swiss watchmaking industry to recover from the quartz crisis/revolution, but a glance at the advertising pages of any glossy magazine aimed at the upper crust will tell you what happened. The surviving firms (other than Swatch — another story) went for the top 1 percent of society with fancy — very fancy — mechanical watches. We're talking thousands of dollars for a Rolex to $1 million and beyond for, say, a handmade Patek Philippe or Greubel Forsey (Google "tourbillon" for a glimpse into another world). I doubt their well-heeled owners wear them every day — I can imagine no greater invitation to being mugged. They probably wear cheapo $10,000 Rolex Explorers on the street. Or one of those 10-buck beauties from Amazon.

Next week, we'll look at a watch that keeps time to within one second per year.

Barry Evans (he/him, barryevans9@yahoo.com), who goes wristwatch-free, is rarely late.

WINNERS WILL BE ANNOUNCED IN THE OCTOBER 7TH ISSUE OF THE NORTH COAST JOURNAL.

Welcome to NCJ Burger Week!

Join us as we revel in our annual celebration of the hamburger. This year, 28 restaurants are participating in the revelry — using everything from habenero onion jam to lamb burgers to waffle buns — to offer up mind-boggling creations. And the bacon. So much beloved bacon. So many burgers, so little time. Is it humanly possible to try them all? We super believe in you.

NCJ Burger Week Pro Tips

Sometimes restaurants run out of burgers.

Good news: #NCJBurgerWeek will be as meaty as last year's and adhering to current county COVID rules. That also means more fellow patrons showing up for dine-in and/or takeout, and, because kitchens aren't staffed with genies and supplies are not infinite, a given restaurant could run out of its #NCJBurgerWeek burger toward the end of a shift. If that happens, know that we feel your pain and it's going to be OK. There's always tomorrow, when you can come back and order the burger we all want you to have. Don't let your hangry self get the better of you and remember that making and serving burgers is a noble calling. Be kind to those doing this important work.

Yes, you may have to wait.

As mentioned above, folks are excited for #NCJBurgerWeek. Word has spread and your favorite participating spot may go from sleepy to busy. Don't be surprised if you have to wait a little and be sure to follow social distancing protocols. Treat yourself to a beverage. Revel in the anticipation. And when your burger shows up in all its juicy glory, post about it on social media using #NCJBurgerWeek.

Not tipping makes you that customer.

Don't be that customer.

We all get caught up in the excitement of a deal but don't lose your manners. Remember the folks cooking and serving are handling more orders and serving up these gourmet burger during the frenzy that is #NCJBurgerWeek. And they're doing it in a pandemic. Tip at least 20 per cent (yes, for takeout, too) and walk out with your head held high, making your parents and the NCJ team proud. Your patty purveyors will remember it when you come back.

You should get some fries and a drink, too.

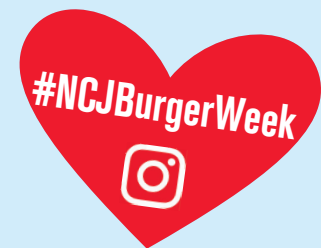

You're not required to buy anything else but can you really say you've had the full experience without some kind of fried side and a beverage? This is the perfect time to try out the fries, onion rings and other goodies our restaurant pals are dishing out while showing a little love to local businesses. Is there craft beer on the menu? Milkshakes? Go big or go home, burger fans.

Enter to win!

What's #NCJBurgerWeek without prizes? See page 2 or visit ncjburgerweek.com for details and to enter to win!

You can keep up with the madness on Facebook and Instagram.

#NCJBurgerWeek is on Facebook and Instagram. Follow us and get up-to-date info on everything #NCJBurgerWeek while you peruse the foodporn. And don't be shy — join the fun and share your own burger photos using #NCJBurgerWeek.
